

BASTILLE DAY IN PARIS.

Gen. John J. Pershing at the head of the American troops was wildly acclaimed by the enormous throngs.

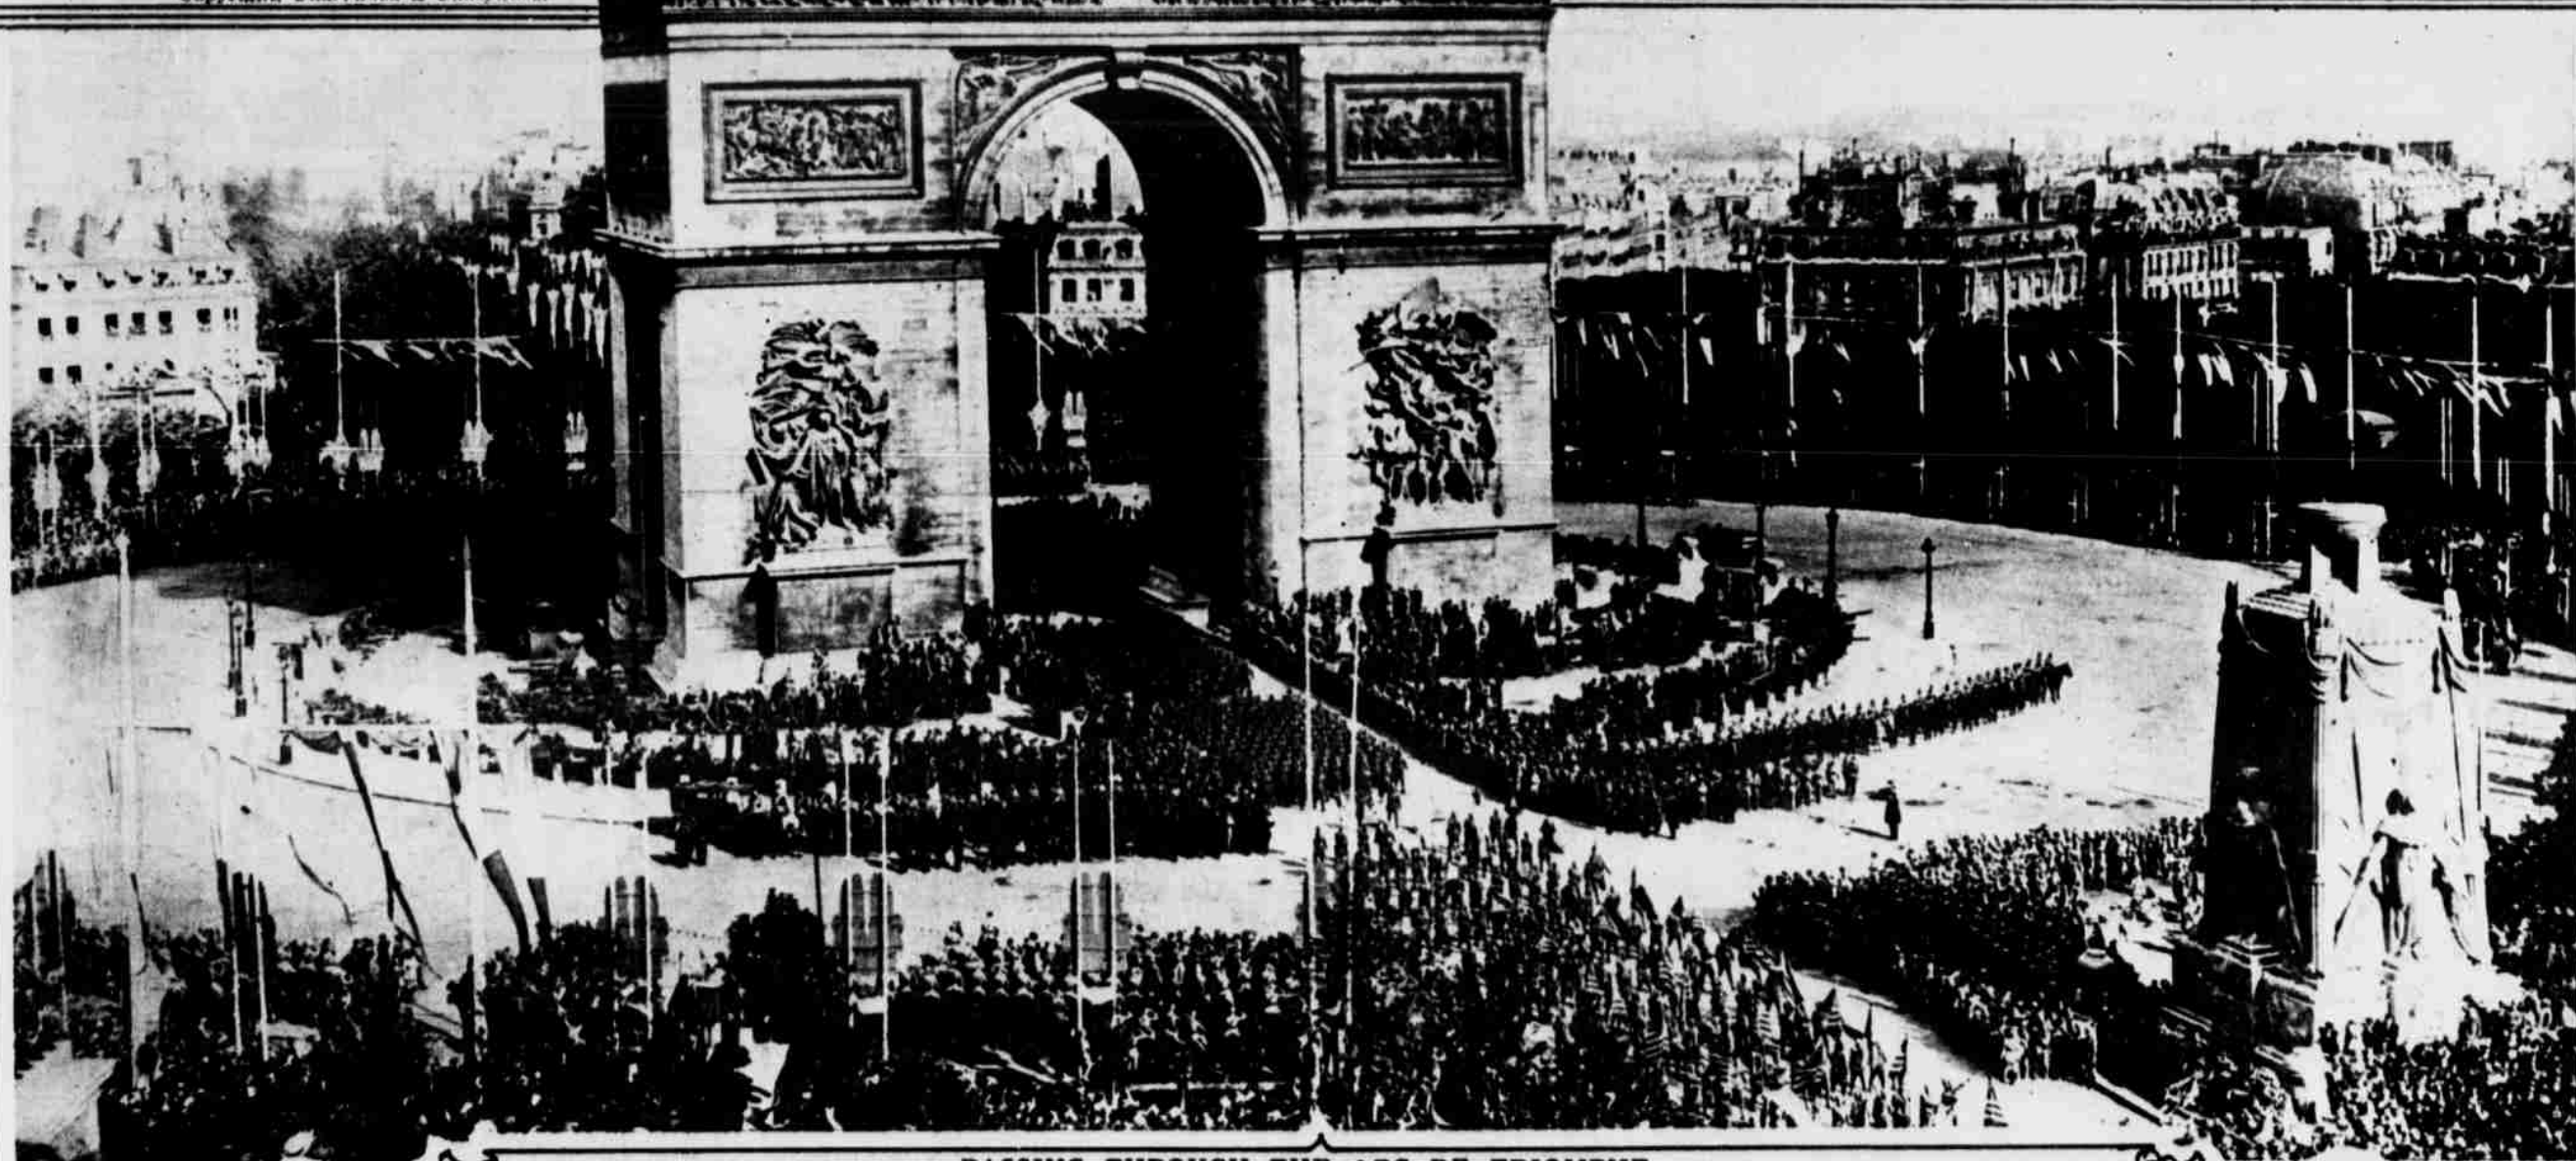

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

THE MARSHALS OF FRANCE.

Marshal Ferdinand Foch and Marshal Joseph Joffre rode side by side, leading the great procession of the allied troops. The Dictator of the Armistice and the Victor of the Marne just after passing the Arc de Triomphe.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

PASSING THROUGH THE ARC DE TRIOMPHE.

The picked American troops with their color bearers in advance received the warmest of applause. The historic spot was lavishly decorated to form a court of honor for the victorious warriors. This was the day for which France had waited for forty years and fought for four.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

THE FLOWER STREWN PATH.

The soldiers of the American division, coming up the Champs Elysees, were cheered by wounded poilus. Every man in the American contingent was six feet tall or more.

HONORING THE LEADERS.

Presenting swords, in the name of France, to Marshals Petain, Foch and Joffre, who may be recognized in that order at the right, on July 14 in the Hotel de Ville.